

Table of Contents

About this book	v
The workers and the warfare state	ix
A note on the current capitalist crisis and low wages	xi
Postscript: the crisis within the crisis	xv
Section 1:
Imperialist globalization and worldwide wage competition
1 Doubling the global workforce	3
Political expansion after 74 years of contraction	10
The new international division of labor	11
Corporate design for worldwide wage competition	13
Marx on wages and competition	15
2 New global networks of exploitation	19
Dell: 'Collaboration of individuals' or global regimentation of workers?	19
Toyota, the pioneer	22
Hewlett-Packard	22
International Business Machines	23
Liz Claiborne	23
U.S. auto companies	24
Boeing	25
Making stuff cheap	25
3 Supply chains: vassals of the lords of capitalism	27
Flextronics, the lead vassal	28
Solectron	30
Boeing and 'reverse auctions'	31
Cisco sheds factories	32
Contracting out for super-profits	33
Price-setters and price-takers: workers are on the bottom	36
Fears of the overseers and secrecy of the monopolies	37
4 Offshoring: millions of service jobs at risk	39
	40
White-collar outsourcing by Europe and Japan	44
Blinder comes up with miserly 'solutions'	45

5	Marxism and globalization	49
	Lenin on twentieth-century imperialism	51
	The dual character of imperialism	53
	Three factors behind new 'globalization'	54
	Marx on technology and the international division of labor	55
	Lenin on the previous imperialist division of labor	56
	International solidarity and globalization	57
	An irony that helped the globalizing exploiters	58
	Impact on U.S. workers of defeat of socialist bloc	60
	Anti-communist crusade showed ruling-class fear	62
	Socialist camp set standard for working-class security	65
	Global expansion can't dispel crisis of overproduction	67
	Section 2:
	Three decades of getting poorer
6	Where high tech is leading	75
	High tech and the military	77
	Role of technological offensive in weakening unions	79
	Changed social composition of the working class	82
	Declining rate of profit and capitalist crisis	83
	The era of permanent layoffs	86
	30 million lose their jobs	87
	'A ceaseless bloodletting'	89
	The end of 'safe' jobs	91
	Law of capitalist accumulation applied to U.S.	93
	High tech and increased exploitation of labor	95
	Manufacturing jobs down, manufacturing up	98
	From manufacturing jobs to low-wage service jobs	100
7	Globalization and low pay	105
	44 million low-wage jobs in 2006	107
	Deskilling jobs and the 'education' scam	108
	Marx on wages and growing poverty	111
	More multi-earner working-class households	115
	Costs rise, men's wages fall—women take up the burden	119
	Driving down the value of labor power	121
	As real poverty goes up, official poverty goes down	123
	Why the bosses need Wal-Mart	127
8	Sexism, racism, and low wages	133
	Women in the workforce	133
		134

National oppression and low-wage labor	136
African Americans and capitalist restructuring	137
Racism and low wages in the prison-industrial complex	143
9 Globalization and immigration	149
Lenin on immigration	149
Searching for cheap labor at home and abroad	150
May Day 2006 in the United States	151
Latina/o immigrants pulled into low-wage labor force	153
Vast super-profits behind debate in U.S. ruling class	154
NAFTA and the crisis of Mexican workers and peasants	156
Remittances and the global migrant labor force	159
10 Late 1970s: Attack on unions begins	161
The importance of unions	161
Listening to the boardrooms, Reagan ambushes PATCO	164
‘PATCO scenario’ takes off	166
Globalization and the ‘fear factor’	167

Section 3:

Lessons from the past for the future struggle

11 Decades of rank-and-file fight-back	173
Solidarity Day and beyond	174
State of the unions: glass half-empty or half-full?	192
12 Reviving the struggle	195
Two earlier periods of great struggle	195
Labor’s failure to fight racism undermined struggle	199
Stirring examples of rank-and-file control	201
From class struggle to witch hunt	209
Rank-and-file support against reaction	210
13 High tech undermines old forms of class organization	213
Limitations of craft unionism	214
Assembly line brought industrial unions	215
Rising tide of deskilled jobs	216
Breakup and dispersal of working-class centers	217
The growing retail proletariat	218
Marx’s law of wages confirmed, with a vengeance	219
14 Building a broad working-class movement	221
	223
U.S. working class: over one-third comes from oppressed nationalities	223
Katrina disaster called for working-class action	226

Women's and LGBT issues are workers' issues	229
Union cities and urban struggle	232
Need for other workers' organizations	234
Marx on unions as organizing centers for the whole class	237
The Million Worker March Movement	241
For a militant, unified labor movement	245
For coordinated, class-wide struggle	246
15 Class struggle and capitalist legality	249
Taft-Hartley, 'right-to-work' laws: illegal brakes on workers' rights	249
Human Rights Watch on repression of U.S. labor	252
Unequal 'protection' for unions	254
Legality follows struggle	256
Plant occupations and the right to a job	258
16 Class consciousness and class struggle	261
Challenging the capital-labor relationship	263
UAW concessionary contracts of 2007	266
Breaking through the bosses' ideology	269
Globalization and international solidarity	273
The end of capitalist stability and social peace	276
New phase of permanent crisis for workers	277
Socialism the only way out	278
Afterword: Imperialist war in the 21st century	281
Three stages of imperialist war	281
'Regime change' from Clinton to Bush	283
Colossus with feet of clay	285
Peace, an interlude between wars	287
Expand or die	288
Acknowledgments	289
Bibliography	291
Endnotes	297
Index	303
About the author	313
Tables and charts
Employment growth 61 months after peak	68
Manufacturing increases & employment decreases	99
Additional hours worked per two-earner family per year	116
The self-sufficiency standard for Philadelphia in 2004	124
	139
Jobs of undocumented workers	155